

Are You a Selfless Leader ... or a Selfish One?

Leadership ... is the word overused? Misused? Or is it misunderstood? Most books on leadership claim they have a secret ... on what leadership is and how to be a great leader; how to be an influencer; a workplace changing leader. Rarely do they—most merely echo talking the walk they've heard from others.

Author Mike Howard talks his walk ... the Ronin walk with what his 16 years with Microsoft as its Chief Security Officer, 22 years with the CIA and serving as a young police officer in the Oakland Police Department generated. One that revealed the path and art of leadership for tomorrow's leaders.

The Art of Ronin Leadership is about:

- tomorrow's new strategy of leadership that should be today's;
- the execution of it with teams; and
- the momentum of what sustained success generates.

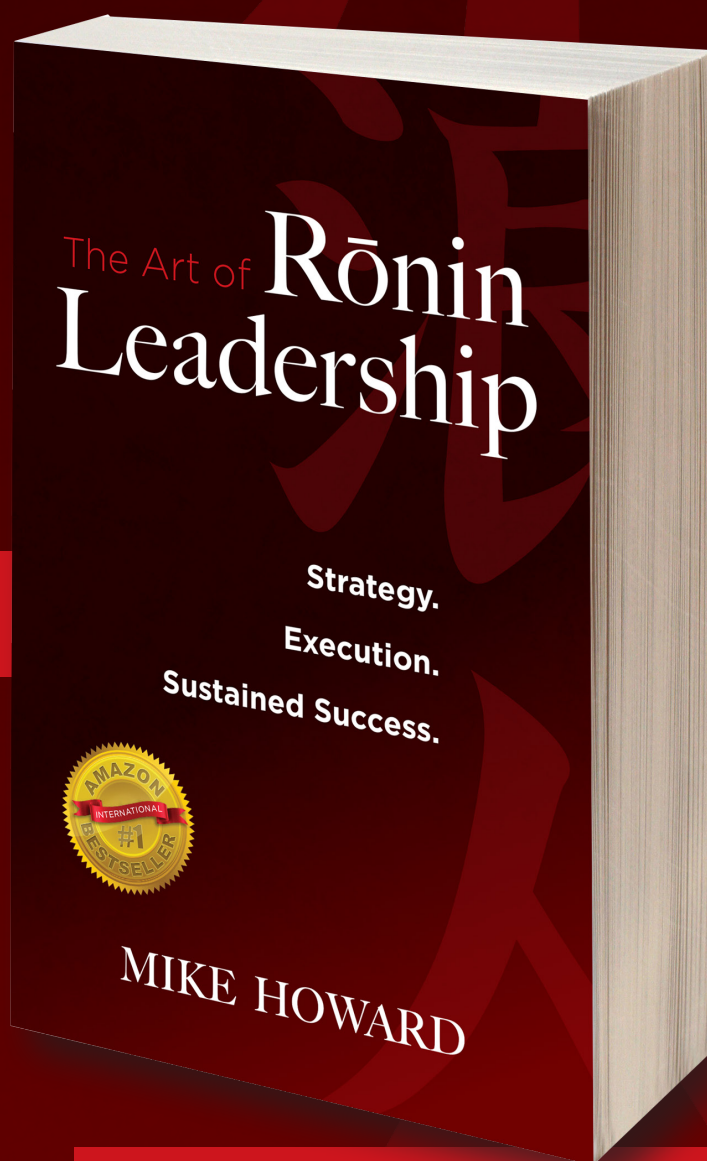

The Art of Ronin Leadership is about the path you take to become a leader—an entirely different way of thinking than merely fixing what is not working or doing better at what has always been done.

To become a great strategic leader, you must crawl, walk, and then run.

Contrary to most in the business realm, leadership does not come in one size. It does not fit all. Leadership is about a journey that takes your conscious willingness to want to be a leader, not a manager. A selfless one.

Mike Howard is a Ronin leader, morphing the way Microsoft managed its global risk. As a speaker and consultant, he works with organizations globally. Visit his website at www.MikeHowardAuthor.com.
